LISTEN to Indiana Licensed Beverage Association Executive Director Brad Klopf discuss why his organization is backing the legislation.

The Indiana Licensed Beverage Association is holding hearings around the s step toward the legalization of electronic gaming devices, sometimes known poker machines.

The association says many of these devices are already found in Indiana bars, restaurant private clubs and bait shops. However, association leaders say licensed liquor establishm targeted for enforcement while officials don't crack down on other types of businesses with Association Executive Director Brad Klopfenstein says the machines could bring in as mu million a year for the state and possibly another $100 million for the counties. He says leg could also put money into the pockets of Hoosier small businessmen.

The association is urging Hoosiers to contact their state lawmakers to tell them that they s legalization. Klopfenstein says State Representative Tiny Adams (D-Muncie) plans to file : for the next legislative session. However, Klopfenstein says supporters need to push for it hearing.
